

In the content of this bachelor thesis is examining the reception of Jan Pelc's novel ...a bude hůř by Czech readers during various political regimes. In case of pre-revolutionary acceptance, there are evaluated reactions of readers in exile and in the independent domestic structures. The analysis of arguments for such acceptance are mentioned. Furthermore, there are summarized the responses after 1989 and the aspects of film adaptation.