

Summary

Selected types of crime committed under the influence of alcohol and drugs In seven chapters, this thesis deals with selected types of crime for which the offender is typically under the influence of alcohol or other addictive substances. The author defines basic concepts and analyze constituent elements of those criminal acts, criminological aspects and mechanisms of influence of addictive substances on the perpetrators of these selected types of crime (drunkenness, threats under the influence of addictive substance, domestic violence, criminality of football hooligans, sexual crimes and drug-related crimes). The first chapter deals with basic concepts and discusses the history and influence of the most commonly used drugs. The second chapter briefly summarizes the development of legislation punishing offenders affected with substance abuse (particularly culpable insane offenders) in our area for the period from Theresian criminal law reforms to the present. The third chapter contains a detailed analysis of crime drunkenness, including criminological aspects examined in the light of the current Czech courts decisions. In the fourth chapter, the author discusses the institution of actio libera in causa in its dolosis and culposis variant. The fifth chapter deals with the analysis of the crime of threats under the influence of addictive substance with emphasis on the merits in practice for traffic offenses as well as in other human activities. The sixth chapter deals with the phenomenon of domestic violence and examines the relation of this phenomenon with alcohol and other addictive substances. In the seventh chapter the author briefly discusses other types of crime for which is typical the influence of addictive substances on the offender. In conclusion, the author summarizes his findings and presents some suggestions de lege lata.

Abstract

This work focuses on selected types of crime that is usually associated with influence of drugs and alcohol at the time of the offender's crime, both in context of criminal law, and in the criminological and psychological context. It is both about a criminal offenses for which the offender is obligatory under the influence of addictive substance (drunkenness, threats under the influence of drugs), and other types of crime, for which the role of addictive substance is important criminogenic factor (domestic violence, football hooligans crimes, some sexual offenses and drug-related acquisitive crimes).