

Summary

Coffee growing is an important part of economy for many countries. It often is their only source of economic income. Global market price instability can highly influence their economic situation. Fair Trade organizations are trying to preclude this trend by guaranteeing stable purchase prices. Nicaragua, Guatemala, Papua New Guinea, Uganda and Malawi have been chosen for regional case studies, which analyze the work and the impact of the Fair Trade organizations on coffee growing and overall agriculture production of these countries.