

Abstract

The thesis “Comparison of Status of Displaced German Inhabitants after the World War II in German Democratic Republic and Federal Republic of Germany” focuses on status of German inhabitants forcedly displaced from Czechoslovakia. In the first part is concerned with the process of transfer itself, its theoretical background and the development of plans of different actors. Next part covers the process of the displacement and the case of problematic numerical expression of scale of the process. The following chapters analyze the status of displaced German inhabitants on the political, economic and social level in Allied occupied Germany as well in the latter both German’s republics. The aim is to compare how divided Germany faced the influx of big amount of new inhabitants.

Keywords

Displacement, Germany, German democratic republic, Federal republic of Germany, Central Europe, Europe after WWII, forced migration, integration