

Abstract (in English):

This bachelor thesis deals with the phenomenon of the (in)separability in the current German language, especially with the prefixes that are able to produce both types of verbs. The thesis comprises two parts, in the first one, this grammar phenomenon is described according to the grammar books and other texts devoted to this issues. In the second part, there is the examination of the theoretical rules concerning a group of verbs of movement with a prefix durch- using a linguistic corpus analysis.
