Abstract

The bachelor thesis analyzes the evacuation of children in the Great Britain during the Second World War. It focuses on the question of what and under what conditions the evacuation took place. In the first chapter, the thesis is focused on creating evacuation plans before the war and their development. The thesis also analyzes the evacuation phases and follow-up care for children in the areas of income. The last two chapters deal with children’s return home and their reactions and reactions of their parents.

Keywords

Evacuation, the Great Britain, children, London, World War II, bombs attacks.