

This thesis builds upon the result that a lot of graph classes - namely classes with bounded expansion - have properties which make deciding graph problems definable in first-order logic easier. One very important example of such a problem is subgraph isomorphism. The purpose of this work is to implement and test proposed algorithm for this problem (which has a linear time complexity in relation to the size of graph we are looking for the subgraph in).