

Abstract:

My thesis is dedicated to the period of years 1979 – 1980, when the islamiq revolution in Iran established complicated relationships among a new Iranian government, shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi and a government of United States of America with the head president Jimmy Carter.

The aim is to map a context between shah's exil and happening in U.S. administrative.

The first part deals with the onset of Pahlavi dynasty and its effect on the history of Iran.

The second part presents exile years when the Shah had to frequently change his place of residence, and complicated development of opinions among leading members of the government.

The third part contains a brief outline of other following happening in United States and the development of the exile government after the Shah's death in 1980.
