Abstract

This diploma thesis deals with the issue of international legal protection of marine environment against the vessel source pollution, which is divided into two main parts – operational pollution and accidental pollution. The thesis introduces main international conventions of both global and regional character. The aim is to consider if the current legal protection is sufficient and eventually to suggest changes.