

The bachelor thesis deals with the difference attitude to the parenting of teen-age students. The aim of the thesis is to find out differences in attitude to parental education of teen-age students during their growing up.

The theoretical part defines basic terms like family and education. This part includes historical development of the parenting, dividing families by functionality and types of problem-burdened families. It focuses on the parenting styles of education. It also deals with emancipation from the family and current view of education.

The empirical part is to find out the surveyed students' attitudes to the education. There will be presented results of a quantitative questionnaire survey which was conducted by using questionnaires submitted to pupils from grammar school in Prague.