

Skeletal animation and spatial optimization of animation data is still an open problem in contemporary computer graphics. The contribution of this work is to provide a functional, effective and easily implementable solution of the optimization problem with the help of the keyframe fitting and approximation by non uniform non rational B-splines with an outlook on what improvements can make this method even more flexible and useful.