This bachelor thesis describes topics about patient dying at home care. The theoretical part includes specification of nursery team and relevant legislation. Next part focuses on frequent diagnoses, patient's needs, evaluation of treatment and tools used. Also nurse's stress prevention is not overlooked, including effective communication and burn out syndrome prevention. The empirical part offers the answers of nurses working in home care. This thesis is not the manual or instructions how to handle the care of a dying patient, but rather opens the mind with respect to the dying process in order to allow patient to chose the way he would like to spend his last moments.
