

Abstract

This thesis deals with the formation and creation of the Republic of South Sudan. The general part of this thesis is focused on describing of basic institutes of international public law which are connected with the creation of sovereign state. These institutes described in the perspective of international law are the theoretical basis for the special part of this thesis which deals with factors that led to the creation, such as the matter of history, conception of state borders in Africa and diversity of population of united Sudan. The main chapter is the chapter that deals with the will and motivation of international community, more accurately the will and motivation of the members of the United Nations Security Council or the will of the African union. On the basis of aforementioned factors the Republic of South Sudan was created. This creation however caused a lot of economical problems for Sudan and led to the birth of the state that has poor infrastructure, poor rate of literacy and poor level of health care etc. The aim of this thesis is to precisely define the motivation and will of actors in this area that led to the creation of the Republic of South Sudan and its early adoption to the UN and the African union.
