Abstract (in English):

The main goal of the paper is to explain a term „legal language“, and to describe its characteristics on the basis of Czech and Russian legal languages. Semantic analysis of the polysynthetic, i.e. homonymic words is performed, namely in the frames of professional juridical style on the one hand and the common Czech language on the other hand. Furthermore, the author deals with a comparison of selected legal terms in Czech legal language with the similar terms in Russian legal language. Practical part of the paper contains results of the research conducted among the students of the Faculty of Law, Charles University in Prague, which took the course of Russian legal language.
