The bachelor thesis "Co-creators of John of Luxembourg's policy. The role of advisers of non-Czech origin in shaping the foreign policy of Luxembourg's first king to reign in Czech lands" focuses on the accession of the Luxembourg House to the Czech throne and their diplomacy within the Czech lands, the Empire and throughout Europe.

Its main goal is to pin down the relationships and connections between the Czech king John of Luxembourg and his advisers – foreign to both internal and, more importantly, foreign policy.

The most important advisers include Peter of Aspelt and Baldwin of Trier. The thesis focuses on the two in particular.

The other objective is an analysis of both conscious and unconscious tie-in attitudes of the king and his advisers towards the policy of the Přemyslids, the dynasty previously in power.

The thesis will also take into account the social and cultural state of affairs of the High Middle Ages.
