

This diploma thesis entitled The current situation of eGovernment in selected regional offices in the Czech Republic is centered on actual state of electronic public administration at Czech regional offices. Author of the thesis seeks to give an account of the E-government project in the Czech Republic, its development and strategic documents. Subsequently listed are examples of E-government in foreign countries and its current trends. Practical part is devoted to comparison of the financial costs and current stage of E-government projects at regional offices. Presented are results of the survey centered on the citizens' awareness about the E-government services in the Czech Republic. In the end of the thesis its author seeks to evaluate the findings and suggest recommendations for the future development of projects at regional offices.
