

Abstract

This thesis presents an analysis of the mutual relationship between the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court and the legislation of the Czech Republic with a special regard to the legal obligation of the Czech Republic to cooperate with the International Criminal Court. The Czech Republic committed itself by the ratification of the Statute of the International Criminal Court (Rome Statute) to provide international judicial cooperation to the International Criminal Court.

For this reason the thesis attempts, via analysis of legal instruments, to compare the link between the Rome Statute and the relevant Czech legislation, especially the constitutional and criminal law. The purpose of this thesis was to find answers for the following questions: whether the Rome Statute is in accordance with the constitutional order of the Czech Republic, whether the crimes in the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court are sufficiently covered by the Czech criminal law and whether the Czech law allows procedural steps required by the Rome Statute.