

Abstract

The thesis called The operation of political committee in the period of the so-called Legal Biennial deals with the activity of political committee, an especial authority subordinated to the Ministry of Justice, in the period of the so-called Legal Biennial, i.e. in 1948-1950. The main aim of the committee's activity was to direct the drafts of new laws presented by particular expert committees and to adjust ideologically its content.

In the first part of the thesis, the author presents the period of so-called Legal Biennial and describes the procedure of creation the new laws and its passing in the National Assembly. In this part, the author also dealt with the establishment, competetions and tasks of the commission and afterwadrs she presents also its members and organisation of the committee's activity. One of the results of the author's work is also a tabular survey of the committee's meetings including the attendance and discussed topics.

The second part of the thesis is oriented to legal questions discussed by the committee on its meetings, arranged in thematic order and on the influence of the committee on the final wording of presented laws.

Finally, the author presents some of the main members of the political committee who significantly influenced its operation.