

Abstract:

This thesis deals with the development of education in anesthesiology and intensive care in the Czech Republic. The operational objective of the historical-theoretical thesis is to explore specialized education in the field of intensive care from its roots to the present. At the beginning of the thesis describes the development of the field of Anesthesiology and Intensive Care, also are given information about the work of nurses, including their competencies in this field before the official introduction of specialized study. The following chapters are devoted specialized education from 1971 to 2013. Each of these chapters ends with a list of competencies of nurses, which are then compared. The thesis is the comparison of specialized study from 1971 to 2013. The thesis also deals with the development of the field paramedic and informs about current possibilities of specialization in intensive care and specialization at universities with their comparison.