

The European political parties and cooperation of national parties in the parliamentary groups in the European Parliament are very important aspect of the European Union. Here is list of them:

One of the most successful organizations is the European People's Party. This party has long tradition of collaboration between conservative, liberal and Christian democratic parties. She is the only the only one party, which allows individual membership. Though they have inner disputes about the finalité of the EU, they keep their enthusiasm towards the united Europe.

The Party of European Socialist is the second biggest in the European Parliament. They are slightly less cohesive about the future of the EU, but since approval of their basic program in the year of 1992 they are more capable of acting due to remove of the national veto. They have organized "Network Europe", organization of party activists, which helps to bring the PES closer to citizens.

The European Liberal Democratic and Reform Party is also party with long tradition. This party has included both parts of liberal scene - social as well as free market liberals. They have joint parliamentary group with the European Democratic Party.

Another party in the EP is the European green party. They are little special due to their origin. They want more direct democracy and wider participation. They have formed regional networks to discuss problems in lower levels.

The European Free Alliance is small European party composed by regional parties. Only a few members have enough popularity to gain seats in the EP. They form joint club with greens.

The European Democrats are new liberal group composed mainly by Italians M.E.P.'s from La Margherita, UDF deputies and Labour party from Lithuania. They are defendants of further integration, however their problem is, they are too small. They cooperate with the ELDR.

The Alliance for Europe of Nations is a group of conservative parties, which are in favor of influence of member states. This is group with wide range of opinions. On one side there are moderate parties and on the other side you can find there some right wing radicals.

The EUDemocrats is a group of radical eurosceptics, who wants to reform radically the EU or completely abolish it. This is diverse group with parties from right to left; their only common point is the resistance to the EU.
