

Resumé

The subject of the thesis, “Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Judgments in the Czech Republic“ has been chosen by the thesis‘ author for its topicality, especially considering the latest changes in the legal regulation in this area.

The thesis concerns itself with recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments primarily in terms of the legal regulation and its development in the past few years; special attention is than paid to the legal regulation in the European Union, where a considerable part of the thesis is dedicated to the new Regulation Brussels I bis, effective since January 2015. Furthermore the author is writing on the rest of the European legislation, mainly various other European regulations connected with the recognition and enforcement of judgments in the European Union, such as the Regulation Brussels II bis, the Regulation on Inheritance, the Regulation on the European Enforcement Order or the Regulation on the European Payment Order.

The thesis also concerns itself with comparing the previous and current legal regulation in the Czech Republic, especially the new Act on International Private Law, effective since 2014, as well as the international legal regulation, as witnessed in various bilateral and multilateral treaties.

The thesis aims to offer an insight into the current issues regarding the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments in the Czech Republic, to offer a comparison with the previous legal regulation, to point out probable problematic and controversial issues (and also to suggest possible solutions), as well as to serve as a basis for potential further research in this specific area.

In the first chapter of the thesis the author writes on and explains the various basic terms and definitions necessary to fully understand the issues presented. In the second chapter the author analyzes the various aforementioned sources of legal regulation, that is the national legal regulation, the international legal regulation and the legal regulation in the European Union.

In order to create the thesis, various sources have been used, the Czech and the international sources, those published on paper and the electronic sources, periodicals and also the legal regulation as well as the relevant judicial decisions.
