

This bachelor thesis deals with the current state of anonymity in the Internet environment and its historical development. The theoretical part is topped with the comparison of anonymity and identity in the online environment, complemented by the users themselves showing their motivation to use real identity on the one hand and anonymity on the other. Further analyzes currently used identification technology compared with the tools for maintaining the anonymity on the Internet.