

Diploma thesis "Changes in International Economic Relations Due to Present Depression" deals with course of events and changes on international economic scene in relation to the origin of existing financial crisis. First part analyzes basic short-term and long-term causes of the crisis. Second part continues with the response of three major players in world economics, United States, European Union and China, followed by the response of a major force in international economic cooperation, the G-20 Group. Third part applies theory of international regimes to these issues and fourth part analyzes possibilities of international developments in relation to the origin of international regimes, reform of the International Monetary Fund, capitalism, regulation of international economic relations and protectionism.
