

This bachelor thesis is focused on issue of hung parliament (no single-party majority) which has arisen contemporaneously in Great Britain and in Australia after elections in 2010. In the theoretical part of this thesis the party systems of examined countries is presented, as well as the definition of what happens when hung parliament sets in. According to two case studies of the 2010 elections in Great Britain and Australia the question of the cause of hung parliament is answered.