

Abstract

The thesis analyzes the reflection of the transfer/expulsion of Germans in post-war Czechoslovak press in the years 1945-1948. It focuses on the first critical reactions that were published in selected journals. Last but not least, it analyzes problems related to transfer (expulsion) of the Germans from Czechoslovakia during Second World War. First of all the thesis focuses on weekly Obzory and Vývoj the managing editor Pavel Tigrid under the auspices of the Czechoslovak People's Party. It also analyses text in independent weekly Dnešek, that is connected with Ferdinand Peroutka, and critical comments of Přemysl Pitter and Michal Mareš, that were influential in the post-war period. Overall, the thesis analyses the reflection of the transfer through these personalities and their articles in selected Third Republic's journals.
