

Abstract

This thesis examines the discourse of political documentaries. It shows how documentary films have developed and notes the changes of structural elements resulting from this development. The aim is to characterize the discourse of political documentaries, using the method of critical discourse analysis of contemporary documentaries focusing on the persona of George W. Bush, terrorist attacks and the war in Iraq.