

This thesis deals with the recent issue of increased number of university students. It entails the problematic success on the labor market or reduction of quality of the particular studies. This research focuses not only on the Czech Republic region but also on some other chosen countries contending with the very similar issue. This thesis follows the analogous paper of Jan Keller and Lubor Tvrđý: „Vzdělanostní společnost? Chrám, výtah a pojišťovna“. Classical statistical research and questionnaire survey were employed as the key methods of answering the main inquiries.
