

Abstract

The thesis analyzes the employment termination by notice, both in terms of the formal requirements of a valid legal act leading to the termination of employment in particular by notice, and in terms of judicial practice in deciding labor disputes, particularly disputes concerning the invalidity of termination of employment terminated by the employer's notice. The thesis is written according to applicable laws of the Czech Republic, EU law and international conventions relating to the issue of termination of employment.