

This work focuses on object recognition and tracking by using laser range finder sensor. The topic examines various solutions proposed by other authors and analyzes the issue as a whole. The application of the task then takes place in a robot competition, which is used as a reference problem and solved subsequently. Port solutions are emphasized over PC platform solutions. The basis of the solution utilizes the principle of Kalman filters and the identification of objects by their position and speed.