

This diploma work deals with a psychosocial atmosphere in a prison background. It highlights recent changes in our prison system and investigates their influence on psychosocial progress' atmosphere, which was felt by a group of drug addicted men, who were under special care in a specialized detachment for drug addicts. Findings are compared to parallel research of a homogenous group of convicted drug addicted prisoners in a standard prison environment.

The work itself is based on the original R. H. Moose' technique CIES, which has been developed for psycho-social climate research in the prison. The updated Czech form of this answer sheet from 1984 became a principle of this work.
