

Abstrakt v anglickém jazyce

This thesis deals with the topic of motivation for volunteering in social work. The work focuses on theoretical knowledge of description, discusses the theories of motivation, its types and motives. The theoretical chapters further defines and explains the concepts of volunteering and volunteer. A separate section describes the role of volunteers in non-profit organizations, and then presents the organization DMO POBYTY z. s., whose aides have become the subject of research for the empirical part of this thesis. The aim is to find out what motivates volunteers to serve without compensation. The practical part is research used qualitative methods of data acquisition and subsequent analysis and interpretation of interviews with volunteers particular non-profit organizations.