

This thesis deals with the question of variation of direct interrogatives in spoken French.

In the first, theoretical part of the thesis, I provide information about the spoken form of French and variationist linguistics, and I define direct interrogatives from the perspective of various grammarians and variationists. In the second, practical part, I look into the forms of interrogatives that can be found in my own corpus and analyse the frequency with which they appear.