ABSTRACT

The bachelor thesis is focused on career success predictors identification among Humanities and Social Sciences college graduates. In theoretical part, different approaches to career concepts are compared and existing research on career success predictors identification is summarized. Attention is paid also to career initiation of college graduates and their employability on the labour market with a comparison of different Fields of Study. Empirical research investigation among college graduates of aforementioned Study Fields, who graduated five to six years ago, has been made, and the extent of association between reached career success and the course of study has been measured. Further possible directions of qualitative and quantitative research on graduates career success is proposed.

KEY WORDS

career, career success, graduates, Humanities, Social Sciences, labour market