Abstract

This thesis provides a comprehensive overview of insurance supervision in the Czech and European law. First part outlines the basic concepts and then briefly discusses the evolution of supervision in the Czech lands. The thesis observes expanding goals of insurance supervision and growing number of institutions performing the supervision during the history. Next part follows insurance supervision in terms of applicable regulations according to the Czech law and establishes list of entities under supervision, deals with supervisory authority and its competences, and proceeds to breakdown the subject of supervision. It also focuses on oversight by individual sectoral laws and offers a view of the upcoming changes. The work also presents insurance supervision from the perspective of the European law. It deals with the requirements that EU law on supervision poses, as well as the newly established authorities of macro- and micro-prudential supervision. In the conclusion section the upcoming changes in supervision of the insurance industry are discussed.
