

Abstract

The diploma thesis „Influence of state policy on cooperatives in the Czech Republic after 1989“ examines the most significant changes that occurred in the evolution of cooperative ideas in Czechoslovakia, respectively Czech Republic after the revolution in 1989. It is solved the question of denial of cooperative principle, or mixing it with other forms of human activity. The work examines the phenomenon after 1989. It does so particularly in relation to institutional change and general context. It uses the particular methods of institutional analysis and discourse analysis. Work takes into account the main socio-political currents and paradigms that while legislative changes and changes in the concept of the moment was most reflected. Work is interested in neoliberal approach that was in our countries present in the nineties. Neoliberal approach is still actual in some of approaches and ideas. Following this is transferred to the applicable standards. This happens in the context of institutional transformation throughout society. At diploma it is important to compare the ideas and principles of cooperatives with the neoliberal approach. It tested the coexistence of neoliberal ideology and cooperatives.
