

Purpose of this thesis is to introduce prevention politics in Jeseník region and to examine how are these programmes for children and adolescents financed and who mainly realizes them, describe some past and current preventive programmes and make insight into their activities. In the last part of the thesis will be evaluation of activities of these programmes using an survey. First three chapters generally describe the juvenile crime prevention in the Czech Republic and some other states. In the fourth chapter, the demography of the Jeseník district is described. Last four chapters deal with prevention politics and how it works in the Jeseník district and who is in charge of the policy, which financial resources are used and which organizations make use of these resources. Moreover, the reader is told about the main objectives of the crime prevention in this area and about the process of fulfilling the aims. The last two chapters describe selected prevention programmes which have been implemented in the Jeseník district since 1996 up to now. And the questionnaire results are shown there. The questionnaire was carried out in the Jeseník district and its topic was perceiving safety and impact of prevention programmes.