Abstract

Bachelor’s thesis "Lay first aid by children of primary school" is focus on pupils in the third class of primary school and their knowledge about first aid. The aim of this work was to find out if children know, how to cope with different situations, when there is a hurt friend or other person, with calling the ambulance service and with providing basic first aid.

The theoretical part is devoted to general first aid, its history, classification, principles of calling for ambulance service and do first aid for minor and severe injuries.

The empirical part contains aims and hypotheses, methodology and organization of the investigation, characterization and description of the sample. In the thesis, there is a presentation of the results of the survey, which took place at primary schools in Roztoky and Velké Přílepy and in scout in Roztoky by the form of a conversation with the children about a model situation. In the discussion there are results of the survey, interview with the scout clubs and analysis of the hypotheses.

In the conclusion of this thesis, there are results of investigation and I also mention the benefit of the thesis.