

ABSTRACT

This bachelor thesis deals with residential satisfaction, it's fractional aspects of their importance and relation to socio-demographic structure of a group of population, living at Kutna Hora house estate U Nádraží. The study is based on theoretical resources and satisfactory of the population, as well as problems of construction settlement. This study is focused on valuation and analysis of the results obtained via questionnaires, surveys and population census statistical data. The study implies, that the location of selected population living around this area is satisfactory and adequate for a significant segment of the local residents. However, the residential classification does imply some problems. Most of those people living at the location do not consider the place completely safe and ideal for living.

Key words: Kutná Hora, residential satisfaction, housing estate, residential stability