

Theme of this thesis is a description, analysis and evaluation of František Martin Pelc's Czech Language Grammar Textbook. On the background of existing knowledge it presents new findings concerning not only the textbook as such - its content, structure, methodology - but also historical events of its development and further application.