

Abstract

International legal aspects of creation of the state Israel

The thesis is dedicated to a state as subject of International Law and to process of its creation, particularly focuses on the State of Israel its specifics. Besides mentioned specifics of creation of Israel was impossible to ignore connotations towards Palestinian statehood and Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

First two chapters are aimed on the presentation of particular elements of state according to Montevideo Convention on Rights and Duties of States (1933), and the ways in which states are created. Necessarily, I also had to deal with the topic of recognition of a state by other subjects.

In the third part, imaginary center of gravity of the thesis, State of Israel is subjected to test according to the above-mentioned elements of statehood. It is dealt with the irreplaceable role of the United Nations in the process of the creation of Israel. As it is mentioned in this Chapter, I do tend to the view of some authors who consider the emergence of Israel as a completely unique case of the State created by decision of international organization. Detailed introduction of the Resolution of UN General Assembly on the partition of Palestine is thus presented as the true legal basis for the creation of the state of Israel. In its conclusion, the third chapter deals also with Palestinian statehood.

In the fourth chapter, I deal with the follow-up and in truth inseparable issue of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and its various phases. International relevant stages of the conflict are mainly selected.

The conclusion sums the thesis up and two annexes follow it systematically. The first can be referred to as a historical excursion into the history of Palestine. In the second typology of armed conflicts is approached, as I deem it is necessary regarding to the specific content of the fourth chapter of the thesis.
