

Evolutionary algorithms have proved to be useful for tackling many practical black-box optimization problems. In this thesis, we describe one of the most powerful evolutionary algorithms of today, CMA-ES, and apply it in novel way to solve the problem of tuning multiple coupled PID controllers in combustion engine models.