

SUMMARY

The theme of this thesis is the duties of members of a Limited Liability Company. Recently experienced legislation about legal relationships of a Limited Liability Company many changes related to the new recodification of private law, made by the Act no. 89/2012 Coll, Civil Code, and by the Act no. 90/2012 Coll., Business Corporations Act. Recodification had very significant impact on some areas of a Limited Liability Companies and duties of their members. From this perspective it is a very current theme.

The thesis is divided into five chapters. For thesis were used as primary sources laws of the Czech Republic, from secondary sources case law and numerous monographs, articles and commentaries to relevant laws.

The most significant changes that directly affected the duties of members of a Limited Liability Company, are minimization of the amount of capital, pushing deposit and liability duties in the background, incorporation of the loyalty to the law, the possibility of acquisition of shares by the company, the possibility of creating more types of shares, the possibility of acquiring a stake in the company from non-owner and many others. The basis of the whole recodification is largely dispositive legislation that puts greater responsibility and prudence on members but creditors as well.

The key chapters of this thesis are the last three chapters that already deal with specific duties of members. The author is trying to enumerate basics duties, but also to their evaluation in the system and also to compare some scientific interpretations, which appears in the current legal scripts. This is a new and relatively delicate legislation, and due to the absence of new current case law are opinions of specialists divided into different groups. Many different opinions to the concept to individual duties of members are in this thesis listed, where the author tries about hers own assessment of problems and presentation of hers own opinions.
