

Abstract

The purpose of this rigorous thesis is to explore the absolute and relative grounds for refusal of registration of the Community trademark. The paper deals with the basic principles of the Community trademark including the description of the registration process. The paper further describes each of the absolute and relative grounds for refusal of application and analyses the decisions of the Court of Justice of the European Union concerning the individual grounds.