

Abstract

Bachelor's thesis "The Czechoslovak Exile Government during the Second World War and its Attempts for the Repudiation of the Munich Agreement by France and Great Britain" examines the development of the struggle of the Czechoslovak exile government's own recognition as the legitimate representative of the Czechoslovak Republic and the associated repudiation of the Munich Agreement. Thesis in the period 1938-1942/3 examines the process of the formation of our exiled government abroad, its recognition by world powers and repudiation of the Munich Agreement with a brief account of some events that preceded the Munich conference and the war. It uses the method of descriptive case study. Based on these information it is clear that the above process was the result of complex diplomatic negotiations. The UK government hesitated many times and had a number of comments. The situation has always changed with how the war changed the situation on the battlefields of World War II. The Czechoslovak government in exile eventually reached the repudiation of the Munich Agreement by France and Great Britain.
