

This master's thesis is concerned with the financing of NGOs in the Czech Republic particularly in terms of ensuring their financial stability. Divided into theoretical and practical part, it focuses on studying the present situation in NGOs financing in a broader context, describing the relevant economic aspects and fundraising resources. The practical part is designed as the case study of the Safe Line Association, analysing the utilization of fundraising resources and the way of ensuring the financial stability of the organization. It presents the results of the fundraising audit, carried out in the organization by the author of this thesis, and its evaluation.