

Abstract:

This bachelor's thesis is focused on the bullying and its possible impact on the personality of the offender. The first part deals with the bullying in general, it contains the definition, the conditions, which cause the bullying, and its different forms. The second part deals with the problem of aggression, its etiology and different types. It focuses on the possible influence of nature versus nurture. The main part deals with the personality of the offender. It contains different typologies of offenders and it describes possible changes in the personality. The impact is described as psychological, social and behavioral change. Final part is a proposal of a qualitative research project. Its aim is to explore possible changes in cognition by the offenders. It is focused on the perception of bullying from the offender's perspective compared to the perspective of people who didn't participate in the bullying or were "just" in the role of bystanders.
