This bachelor's thesis describes the design and implementation of a C# application for classifying disorders of patients' balance systems using data acquired from posturographic measurements. The application was created by the paper's author on the basis of a collaborative effort with experts from the 2nd Faculty of Medicine at Charles University in Prague, which was also the site of its first experimental use for testing and research purposes.