

Abstract

This bachelor thesis called "Eminent female politicians as Role-models" deals with the influence of eminent female politicians on women in Czech republic and their political participation, especially influence on their interest in becoming politicians. This work is based on women political participation and representation in the context of "role-models". The term "role-models" means eminent female politicians in the history of Czech and Czechoslovak republic. Second part of this bachelor thesis is a case study that determines whether or not respondents, in this case actual Czech female politicians, have been influenced in order to become politicians by other female politicians.
