The Bachelor thesis entitled - Factors affecting the mental condition of seriously ill patients describes an individual's mental coping ability and his fight against factors that are connected with serious illness and are significantly affecting his mental condition. The thesis brings information about important changes that affect the patient's perception about his serious diagnosis. This thesis counters the theories put forth by people who work with seriously ill patients.

At the end of the thesis, I describe the selection of factors that fundamentally affect the patient's mental state and health condition which were elicited from the questions put forth in the interviews.
