

Summary

The paper deals with the issue of house search and inspection of non-residential space in criminal proceedings. It focuses on the historical and current legislation. The main part of this thesis deals with conditions of home searching and inspection of non-residential space. Applicable legislation is analyzed in terms of both basic definition of the term "flat" and "commercial space", as well as in terms of regulation ineffectiveness of evidence in case of violation of the law. The author of the work also discusses a radical judgment of the Czech Constitutional Court, which annulled the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, which allowed the prosecutor to order a search of non-residential space. The author gradually expresses the individual arguments of the Constitutional Court, trying to answer whether the annulment of provisions appropriate solution. In the next part the author demonstrates on case study the fulfillment of the legal conditions set out in first part and based on an analysis of reported case derive specific conclusions. A part of the paper focuses on the comparison of foreign laws: namely the legislation of the Federal Republic of Germany and the Slovak Republic. The work also includes an analysis of the legislation of house search of law firms. The main objective of this part of thesis is to examine the issue of searches of law firms. The thesis analyses legal regulations for searches of law firms and also cloud storages. The author also deals with the fundamental issues maintain confidentiality and protection confidential relationship between lawyer and client. In the author's opinion, the current legislation is insufficient. Even after the Supreme Court took a stand on extensive interpretation of term "space where the lawyer practices law." Thesis includes also author's views and considerations de lege ferenda, particularly in relation to the permission of state prosecutor order a search of non-residential spaces and legislation of searches of law offices.

Key words: house search, criminal proceedings, law firms